gain experience

Professionals new to the field need experience, advice, and most importantly, networking opportunities. Mentoring gives junior engineers valuable insights not only into coding, but into the roles and strategies available.

gain candidates

As the tech industry continues to grow and innovate, employers need a way to access quality candidates. Mentor Weekly provides employers with a potential hiring pool of professionals that their employees already have experience with. Mentors gain leadership skills, and companies invest in the future of the field.

When mentors invest 30 minutes a week advising a professional just starting in tech, employers, mentors, and mentees win.
